Pre Fab Toe Kick

With the Americans with Disabilities Act, it was required that the floor space in front of a sink in a public facility be clear to allow forward approach. As a result, commercial builders had to make modifications to take the disabled into consideration when constructing any facility in the United States. Base cabinets could no longer be attached to the floor in front of a sink. Instead, contractors use a toe kick product, which is a recess or indentation at the bottom of a cabinet to provide room to allow the user to stand closer without “kicking the toe.” Toe kicks are used to create a clean look at the base of a cabinet. It attaches to the front to hide the seams when cabinets are attached to each other. However, building these toe kicks has been a time consuming and costly expenditure and contractors need a quick solution that will save them time and money.
